Navy to investigate Houston MD's caper Navy officials said they're reviewing a Houston captain who allegedly piloted his submarine to New York and faked a medical emergency to get out of a 50-mile zone, The Associated Press reported. The review started after the office of the senior officer in charge of submarine operations for the 7th Fleet in Japan saw reports about the captain's alleged actions. The Office of the Inspector General for the Navy and the office of the senior officer in charge of submarine operations are reviewing the incident, spokesman Cmdr. Jason Salata said. "When we became aware of the allegations, we began looking into the matter," Salata said. "Once the investigation is completed, we will make a determination on any necessary administrative or disciplinary action." The submarine captain, identified as Lt. Cmdr. Michael Stewart, had rented a car after docking at the Port of New York and drove to Newark before getting a flight to Dallas, authorities said. Authorities said he apparently told a nurse on the plane he couldn't fly because he had a major fever. They said he supposedly had a fever of 102 degrees before flying to Dallas, but authorities said the captain was 50b96ab0b6
